

Abstract

Despite of the absence of solar irradiation and high temperatures in cabins radiation still plays a considerable role on thermal comfort of humans. The relative significance of radiation in comparison to convection is pointed out with coupled simulations of the software packages SWIFT and RadTherm. An assessment of comfort is performed using the concept of the equivalent temperature.